PRESS COMMUNIQUE.

Port St. George, October 15, 1936.

No. 773.—In this Presidency, the Indian Succession (Amendment) Act, 1926, affects the form in which wills can be made by Hindus, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains, outside the original jurisdiction of the High Court of Madras.

2. According to the law as it stands, at present, any person could make a will outside the said original jurisdiction, except with reference to immovable properties situated within such original jurisdiction, in two ways:—

- (1) by mere word of mouth;
- (2) by a written instrument.

The instrument need not be executed in any particular form. For example, it need not be signed by the testator, i.e., the man who makes the will. Nobody need attest it, i.e., sign it as a witness. It may take the form of a petition to the village authority or an entry in a village register. Even a mere draft of a will is enough.

3. The changes introduced by the present Act are as follow:—

(i) It is no longer possible for anyone who is not either a soldier employed in an expedition or engaged in actual warfare or a mariner at sea, to execute a will merely by word of mouth. A written instrument is made absolutely necessary.

(ii) The testator should sign or affix his mark to the will or it should be signed by some other person in his presence and by his direction. The signature or mark of the testator or the signature or mark of the person signing for him should be so placed that it should appear that it was intended thereby to give effect to the writing as a will.

(iii) At least two persons should attest the will as witnesses. Each of them should have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will or some other person sign the will in the presence and by the direction of the testator; or if they did not see either of these, each of them should have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark or the signature of such other person. It is not enough if the person who signed for the testator and under his direction says the testator asked him to sign and that he did so.

(iv) Each of the attesting witnesses should sign the will in the presence of the testator. But it is unnecessary that an attesting witness should be present at the time when another attesting witness signs it.

4. The Act comes into force on the 1st of January 1937. So any will made on or after that date should conform to these new provisions.

5. Copies of this Act translated into the principal vernaculars may be purchased from the Superintendent, Government Press, Madras.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Madras, the 24th October 1925.

(3) to publish the said report.

Mr. K. Y. Sengapattar Appayyar to one Divan Bahadur Sir S. R. M. Annaswami Chettyar.

The election petition presented by the petitioner above named on the 2nd January 1925 to His Excellency the Governor-General against the election of Dewan Bahadur Sir S. S. M. Anjamahd Chatterjee, M.A., as a Member of the Council of State in the British New-Maharaja's Council at 140 the Mahanagar, on the 10th November 1925 having been forwarded to us for enquiry and report and the purpose being on the epidemic in the presence of Mr. M. N. Chaudhary, counsel for the petitioners and of Mr. Nayak, Great, against for the respondent, we beg to submit the following

Recent

This is a petition calling in question the election of the respondent to the Council of State in the election held in November, 1902, and the petitioner asks for a declaration that the respondent's election is void. The petition for setting the election aside is signed by the voters who have returned cards in protest to the election. The petition is in the petitioners' names and is furnished by the petitioner in the name of an association on behalf of the respondents and by the names of the endorse list is on his side. Briefly stated, the allegations in the petition are: That in support of a large majority through voters in the election, the respondent, although his agents got the voters' names to put their signatures on the declaration, and such signatures of the voters without granting them the right to vote, and that when the declaration is made, the voters' names had been destroyed by his agents to the respondent in Illinois, the voting papers were marked and filed in St. Louis under the instructions of the respondent. Paragraph 3 of the petition stated that the respondent marked for himself and his agents, first and second preferences on all lists in the ballot papers which came to his possession. The three allegations of fact, it was contended, the respondent had not been a free citizen of the United States, and that there had been no free election, inasmuch as the lists of names of voters in which names of the voters had been entered by and on behalf of the respondent.

3. It must be pointed out at this point that the petitioner has not sought to have his vote or sub-stanza (2) of rule 44 (1) of the Election Rules, apparently because in view of the large number of votes obtained by the respondent, it could not be claimed that by annulling a number of votes on the ground of their invalidity, the result of the election would be affected. Petitioner's counsel has mainly contended that the same must be held to be covered by sub-clause (2) of rule 44, clause (1).

governed by the constitution of the country, and, consequently, held strictly to the letter of the constitution. The members of the majority of witnesses have been examined on the side of the petitioner; and, when the petitioner closed his case, it was after that the allegations of paragraph 8 of the petition as to far as it was material to simply that in writing were for himself, the respondent, or his agents used without reference to the whole or inconsistency of the evidence, and were not being sought to be supported by the whole of the evidence. It was also in fact by the whole and reliable, it only seemed to make out that, as far as the respondent was concerned, the witness were all willing to give their best voice as far as they could, but for some reason they did not themselves put their case of preference either in his favor or in the young people but left it to be done by the respondent's case. In this view, it seemed to be desirable to have an opportunity as the effect of the evidence, and the whole of the evidence of the respondent's case, and accordingly included in the parties our intention that the one might first be argued with reference to the answer of the answer, assuming for the sake of argument that we were prepared to accept this evidence on the petitioner's side at the face value. The parties accepted our suggestion and we then asked the parties to argue the case, and we then heard both sides for the first argument, and we have heard with reference to the construction of the relevant rules and those bearing upon the facts presented.

4 The argument has been merely directed to substantiating the true scope of sub-clause (c) of rule 41 (1) and its relation to sub-clause (a) and (b). As a preliminary step it had to be assumed that the alleged in the course of the evidence has been committed by persons who may be regarded as the respondents within the meaning of rule 30 (a). These assumptions have to be borne in mind when the respondents are to be named in the request for an order of suspension, and it has also been contended on the behalf that the acts alleged do not amount to corrupt practice within the meaning of clause 2 of part I of schedule V. In the case we are dealing with, the legal questions involved in the case, we have to consider only questions arising as to the truth or otherwise of the allegations of fact; because we have not thought it necessary to permit the respondents to adduce his evidence or even to dispute the question of the mobility of the respondent in the case of the respondent's wife.

3. Considering, therefore, the foregoing, the question arises: What is the effect of the rule, the first question is whether the electoral colleges may vote of "voided ballots" within the meaning of rule 7 of part I of schedule V. The learned counsel for the petitioner pointed out that under that clause every interference with the free exercise of the electoral right amounts to voided ballots, and under rule 30 (a) the electoral right includes the right to vote as well as the right to refrain from voting in an election. He therefore contended that the voided ballots are of two types: voided (because (a) that vote is cast where a voter expressed his wish to vote for the respondent, the respondent's name did not allow him to mark the vote in himself but took away the ballot paper from him and themselves put it to the mark; and (b) that in certain cases, the respondent may follow in the second, third and fourth preferences in favour of other candidates without his authority of the voter or even contrary to their instructions. We are not satisfied that in the first case of mere it might be said that there had been any interference with the free exercise of the electoral right. It may be that a voting paper which is marked not by the voter but by somebody else is entitled as a vote, but if the voter permits the mark to be put for some body else and the vote is marked in favour of the person for whom he expressed his intention to vote, it is difficult to say that there has been any interference with the free exercise of the vote. It has been contended on behalf of the petitioner that, though in the margin of some of rule 7 the words "voided ballots" are used to include the clause of once that within that rule, we ought not to import into the rule the definition of "voided ballots" that obtains in the Law of Contracts. We accept this argument, but it has nevertheless to be shown that the voter's freedom in the exercise of the exercise of his electoral right has been in some way interfered with. We are not prepared to hold that the mere fact of somebody other than the voter putting in the mark on a voting paper itself amounts to an interference with the free exercise of the voter's electoral right, irrespective of the circumstances whether or not the mark was made intentionally in the exercise of the voter's

5. The second type of cases has seemed so greater difficult, but we are prepared to assume for the purpose of argument that the conduct was very essential to undue influence. It is however clear from the evidence that in the case of some the undue influence, if any, was not exerted, not for the purpose of securing the return of the respondent, but to secure the return of his funds. It has been argued, that, even in such a situation, the case falls under the class (b), at rule 4(1), the language of which is quite general and absolute, and it is not suggested that the purpose of the application of that rule that the respondent must have been essential to for the purpose of securing the election of the respondent.

In answer to the argument based upon the generality of the language of the rule it was pointed out that at the Board meeting in 1916 it was fully intended that, if a corrupt practice in election is to have been avoided by a defeated candidate, the decision of the successful candidate will have to be avoided. The learned counsel for the petitioners was not prepared to go to this length. He decided that from the very nature of the provision and from a consideration of other provisions in the rules, it may reasonably be implied that the corrupt practice must have been committed by the returned candidate or by his agent, but he contended that since the returned candidate is found guilty of corrupt practice, the rule bars, on grounds of public policy, laid down that his election shall not stand, and it was not necessary to enquire the motive or purpose which he had in view in resorting to such practice.

3. Once it is recognized that certain limitations have to be brought in sub-clause (b), then naturally arises the question as to how that sub-clause is to be interpreted in sub-clause (a) and (d) of the same rule. It is by no means easy to disentangle the exact steps of these several sub-clauses, and it is evident that to a certain extent they overlap each other. Taking only one illustration, we may point out that under sub-clause (b) any single act of corrupt practice specified in part I of sub-clause Y will suffice to avoid the election, but under sub-clause (a) the provision is that an election procured or induced by a corrupt practice or an election whose result has been materially affected by a corrupt practice shall be void. It will be noticed that sub-clause (a) is not restricted to corrupt practices under part II of sub-clause Y, and it is difficult to see why it is so provided in sub-clause (b), a single act of corrupt practice under part I should suffice to avoid the election, the rule should have thought fit to lay down the same result in sub-clause (a) only when the election of the returned candidate has been procured or the result of the election has been materially affected by the corrupt practice. Again, under sub-clause (d), the election of a returned candidate is declared void if the election has been a free election by reason of the large number of cases in which undue influence or bribery within the meaning of either part I or part II has been exercised or committed. But sub-clause (d) does not make the result depend upon the number of cases proved. We are therefore led to think that it is not possible to apply sub-clause (b) in all its generality or its literal meaning, but that its application should be determined in accordance with what seems to be in the spirit underlying the several rules. We are aware that sub-clause (d) may be said to correspond to what in the English law is described as common law invalidation, as distinguished from the statutory invalidation provided for by specific enactments, and, as under the common law rule, this provision is intended to cover cases in which a court may be satisfied that the vote of a number of persons were corruptly obtained, but it is not possible to trace the offence in the candidate or in one of his agents. It is impossible to note that, even in dealing with the common law rule, it was recognized that it is always subject to the qualification that the corrupt practice had been committed in favour of the person who had been elected. The following passage from the judgment of Denham J. in the Spanish case (1885), 4 O & M. 71 abstracted at page 50 in Fraser's Book on the "Law of Elections" aptly expresses the qualification and the reason for it:—

"If one saw the bribery was so vile that there could be no further election held in the place, then I should say the election would be avoided, subject only to this, that it would be obviously unfair to avoid the election, if one found that the bribery which had been committed had not been in favour of the person who had been elected,—there must be that qualification always,—for it would be impossible for a person who had been fairly elected to be considered merely because his opponents had been guilty of bribery."

Having regard to the way in which the rules have been worked and the difficulties in their interpretation which we have above referred to, we see no reason why in interpreting them we should not be guided by the considerations underlying the above observation of the learned Judge.

It may be that, if a candidate by himself or by his agents resorted to corrupt practices with a view to helping himself to be, he may thereby secure certain positions under the electoral law of the country or he may even run the risk of being disqualified for the future, if he should be found guilty of such offences; but it would not necessarily follow that the punishment should also include the invalidation of his own election. In this connection, we put to the petitioners the learned counsel the illustration of a candidate for one seat in a constituency helping a friend of his by corrupt practices to win a constituency seat in another ward. The second person is elected to the election of the former candidate for his own ward will not be vitiated by the corrupt practices committed by him in the other ward. But he complained that in the present case where the election has been made according to the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote, the election of all the candidates must be dealt with as a whole and that we cannot separate the return of the respondent as unaffected by the corrupt practices alleged. If the argument is proved to be correct, the petitioner will be in this difficulty that he is not now in a position to have the election of the other candidates returned at the same time and made, either because he is out of time to do so or because he is not able to consent those candidates with the alleged corrupt practices. We do not therefore feel much moved by the argument based upon the fact that the election of the several candidates should be dealt with as a whole and the case of the respondent should not be separated from that of the others. Looking at the matter from the point of view of the voters' intention, it will be anomalous if we are in doubt that even on the hypothesis that the respondent has improperly secured preferences in favour of the other candidates, they are nevertheless entitled to record their vote, but that the respondent himself for whom all the election intended to give their vote should be considered. We are not satisfied that such a result was contemplated as is warranted by the rules. In this view, we have the honour to report that the respondent has been duly elected and we accordingly recommend that the petition may be dismissed.

As the respondent of the enquiry, we recommend that a sum of Rs. 1,000 be paid by the petitioner to the respondent.
